U. S. History In Flags

They ran Stanley Bergman's idea up 18 flagpoles in Civic Center Plaza yesterday and everybody saluted.

The idea came to Bergman a year ago as he drove routinely to work past the bare, white poles surrounding the plaza fountain. Why not, he asked himself, a brave display of flags

Yesterday, to the sound of martial music and the applause of 1000 people, 18 flags were simultaneously hoisted into a crackling Western breeze.

They ranged from Massachusetts' colonial banner, borrowed from the British navy and emblazoned with the word

"Liberty," to the 50-star emblem of today.

Each flagpole has a bronze tablet, composed by the 49-year-old businessman, describing the historical importance of the flag fluttering above.

The hour-long morning ceremonies yesterday were attended by Mayor John F. Shelley, members of the diplomatic corps, high-ranking military officers and officials of the Sertoma International, the service club which sponsored the idea on the urging of Bergman.

Bergman himself was officially named Flag Commandant for the Permanent Committee for the Pavilion of American Flags.

He was a passenger in a car driven by Joseph Mayor-of the car through the door on the driver's side. Mayor was not hurt.

The driver of the other car in the race has not been identified.

Bremer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Bremer, have donated his eyes to the Highland Hospital Eye Bank. We "wanted some part of David to live on," they said.

Civil Air Patrol planes and ground parties searched the Colorado Rockies yesterday for a light plane that was believed to be down in the northwest part of the state.

The pilot of the Piper Comanche was identified as Airman First Class Paul Utz of Denver. The Air Force declined to identify the other two passengers.

Federal Aviation Agency officials said the plane was due at Denver at 11:20 p.m. Saturday on a flight from Stockton but failed to arrive. The plane had enough fuel to remain airborne until 2:20 a.m. Sunday.

The last report from Utz was over Eagle, Colorado, where he encountered heavy thunderstorms.
